

Naga's Collectivism and Political Imaginings in North-East India

Soihiamlung Dangmei*

Abstract

Despite the fact that the collectivism of Naga identity and political imaginings received international acclaim, the successive unfolding nature of the collectivism in the peace process and the manifestation of the politics of difference, juxtaposed by the counterclaims and contestation from within and without, reveal increasing political imbroglio and identity conundrums. The article delves into the problems and intricacies of Naga collectivism, and the misgivings and conflict that generated in their political imaginings as a nation.
