ABOUT THE SEMINAR

Empowerment lies at the core of inclusive and participatory development, and within this framework, women's empowerment holds a pivotal place. Building an egalitarian and sustainable future requires enabling women to achieve their full potential in education, economic participation, health, leadership, and decision-making. The United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), particularly SDG 5, recognize gender equality not only as a stand-alone goal but also as a cross-cutting theme essential to the 2030 Agenda.

This two-day national seminar seeks to explore the role of women's empowerment in advancing sustainability, equity, and social justice. By bringing together academicians, researchers, students, and professionals, it will provide a collaborative platform to share insights, examine barriers, and propose strategies for accelerating progress toward gender equality. Through diverse thematic sessions and interdisciplinary dialogues, the seminar aims to generate fresh perspectives that strengthen families, build resilient communities, and contribute to a more just and sustainable society.
